

LINDSAY MAXWELL

Sewanee- University of the South

I started riding when I was four years old with Bradley Spragg at the Atlanta Hunt Club.

I became involved with IHSA when I began my studies at Sewanee.

Competing on the Sewanee IHSA team was undoubtedly a highlight of my time there. To take such an individual sport and create a team environment is not an easy feat, but the format of the IHSA shows made that simple. Immediately sharing such a passion with members of the team made freshman year that much more fun, and fostered friendships that remain strong today.

Whether it be the long-lasting friendships, the lessons learned from team experiences, or the growth of my passion for the sport and the animals, all of my experience was incredibly valuable and formative of the person I am today.

I do keep in touch with many IHSA teammates, as well as those on other teams with whom I competed.

I now compete as an amateur at the highest levels of the hunter discipline. My horses and I have won multiple national titles and we continue to strive for excellence. I have also established the Lindsay Maxwell Charitable Fund, which seeks to enable access to education and experience for children with special needs, as well as provide care, compassion, and protection to animals. 🐾
